Decisions taken in the Review mean the UK will have no carrier aircraft capability from 2011-2020. While two carriers are still being built, only one will be converted to launch the planes that have now been selected, and the other will be mothballed. The UK will only have one operational carrier with a significantly reduced availability at sea when Carrier Strike capability is reintroduced in 2020. That carrier is being built according to the old design and will have to be modified to make it compatible with the requirements of the new aircraft: the cost of these modifications will not be known until 2012. The SDSR decision is forecast to save £3.4 billion, but only £600 million of this is cash savings while the remainder is simply deferring expenditure beyond the Department's 10 year planning horizon. The decision will lead to nine years without Carrier Strike and full capability will not be achieved until 2030. And more work will be needed to get the best and most flexible operational use from the carrier. The Committee is disappointed that the systemic issues that have appeared in its other recent defence reports continue to arise. The Committee has built on what has been said in past reports and focussed on two key areas: strategic decision-making and delivery of capabilities "In a concise primer the author describes the fascinating and often bloody history of Afghanistan, the Soviet occupation in 1979, the civil war in 1990 and the rise of the Taliban from the ashes of a bitterly divided and devastated country. The Taliban and Beyond discusses the make up of the Taliban and brings the story of Afghanistan to its present juncture in the aftermath of the fateful events of September 11, 2001 and the declaration of war against terrorism by the US and its allies. The book is interspersed with brief sidebars and photographs that highlight faces and places in Afghanistan."--Back cover. "Akashvani" (English) is

Islam and Post-Modernism: Iqbal as a Turning Point, is a critique of contemporary Muslim responses, especially Ziauddin Sardar, Akbar S. Ahmed, and Tariq Ramadan, to the relative proximity between Islam and Post-Modernism. The book highlights how they have missed the deeper laying philosophical camaraderie between Islam and Post-Modernism. It deconstructs their respective responses, while at the same time it makes a case for reading Allama Muhammad Iqbal as the turning point in Muslim scholarship's responses to Post-Modernism. With The Mystery of Prayer, Sayyid Amjad H. Shah Naqavi provides an annotated translation of Ayatollah Khomeini's early exploration of the inner dimensions of Islamic prayer, expounding on gnosis (irfan) and the exoteric and esoteric stages of wayfaring towards God. This is a fascinating look at America from a Pakistan's point of view - and an equally fascinating look at Pakistan from an American's point of view. The guiding insight of the soft-spoken Dr. Hussain's work is synthesizing the perspectives of the Pakistani and American ways of life. In "Treading a Fine Line," he draws a compelling social and political history against the background of our current age of economic globalization and fast high tech' communications. Amjad Hussain, better known by the pen-name Amjad Hyderabad, was an Urdu and Persian Ruba'i poet from Hyderabad, India. In Urdu poetic circles he is also known as Hakim-al-Shuara.
